Allegan County online Land Atlases are often difficult to search and print. The paper indexes at the Allegan District Library are easy to use, and you may photocopy, scan, or photograph atlas or index pages. If you do use land atlases online and find printing difficult, opt for a screen shot. If your person was in section 10 of Trowbridge Township in 1895—go to the 1895 Trowbridge twp., find section 10, and then do a screen –shot of the enlarged map of section 10 to view the family farm and surrounding farms. Simply hit the “Print Screen” button and paste the image into a word/other document. You can crop the image using picture tools and resize the image to fit your needs and print or save the image to your computer or flash-drive.

Choose a history book, do a search, and cut and paste the search results into Word.

Hint: copy the results page into WORD and have a list of page numbers to enter. This speeds up searching, as the back button is used less frequently if page numbers are entered directly.

To format Settings:

- Use “Image” to view pages as they appear in the book.
- Use “Text” to search a page for highlighted names/search term.
- Use “PDF” to print pages.

In the “Text” Format setting pages with columns will appear skewed. Printing in PDF will give page images without skewing or labels on pages.

[page 397] GEORGE T. IVES, successfully engaged in farming and stockraising in Gun Plains township, Allegan county, represents one of the old and prominent pioneer families of this section of the state. His paternal grandparents, Friend and Harriet (Warner) Ives, were among the earliest settlers of Allegan county. The former was born in Plymouth, Connecticut, December 22, 1790, and in early life traveled extensively through Maryland and Virginia in the sale of Yankee clocks. Later he removed with his family to Lebanon, Columbia county, New York, the family home being established among the religious sect known as Shakers. In 1818 he removed to Medina county, Ohio, settling near Cleveland. He here entered a farm, which was partially cleared, and he further developed and improved the property, built a log house, in which the family lived in true pioneer style, and there engaged in general agricultural pursuits until 1833, in which year he made his way to Allegan county. His farm was located near the village of Plainwell, in what is now Gun Plains township. There had [continued on p. 398] – [NOTE: This was copied & pasted into this document, using the “Text” format. – LK 2015.]
